Sorry, I know this is low resolution and pixelated. But I wanted to get it up there. If you squint you can tell that what we're looking at here is a white car. I had wondered what it was. And the flashing thing in the front seems to be something reflecting off of the front headlight. The dark area is the wheel well. I'm curious why it gets dark and lighter though. Could be a optical artifact caused by the tremendous increase in brightness. We're actually looking at the a very small spectrum of the light which was on the original video. And any small increases or decreases of light in the room can adjust the video camera's electronic iris in such a way that the image becomes light and dark. Not sure if that's what we're seeing here yet or not. Will upload the higher resolution version tonight when its finished building.
